

Looking high in the east in early August as full darkness approaches, you should be able to pick out three distinctive asterisms. The Milky Way meanders through them - weakest to the north, but growing stronger and wider as it heads south.